

Gameplan from WaveHub

ATP BEIJING

WEATHER AND COURT CONDITIONS

Finally we are back! Weather is looking amazing in Beijing, no interruption anticipated, medium warm weather with sunshine, perfect for betting, no extreme conditions for play, low humidity. That's what you would want.

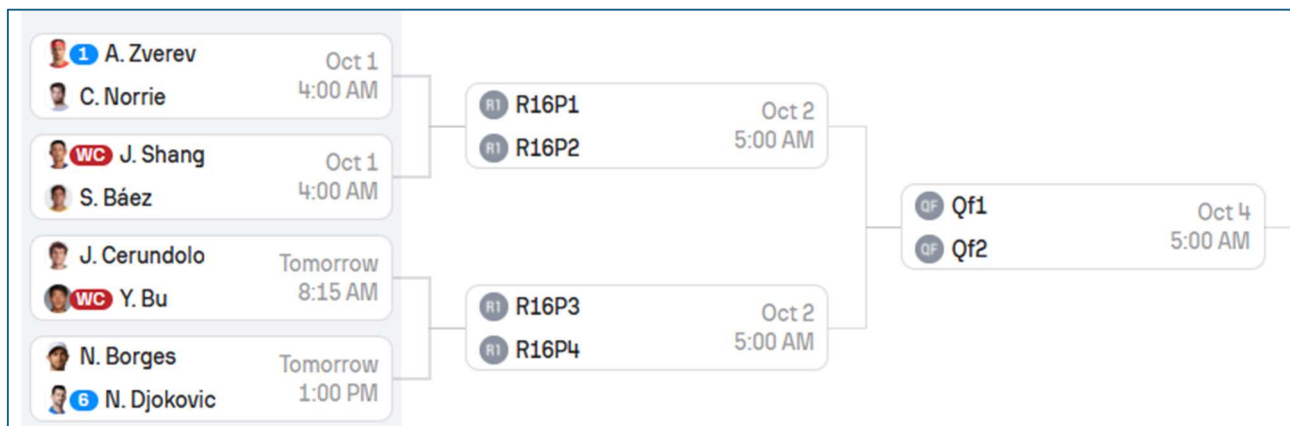

Court speed: 0.96 with a 8.9% ace rate, slower than the first 250s we have had in the last week and a lot like the conditions at the US open, but with no interruptions. Benefitting grinders.

Who benefits: Solid baseliners and rallye grinders like Medvedev, Zverev, Tien, (Gea), Khachanov – notice how they all did well at the US open?

Who doesn't: Players heavy on serve or clay courtiers like Bublik, Struff, Rublev, Hurkacz

Conclusion: I will likely focus more on Tokyo as we have more interesting setups, but for both tournemants there are some really nice matches so I expect a lot of opportunities to bet on.

Gameplan:

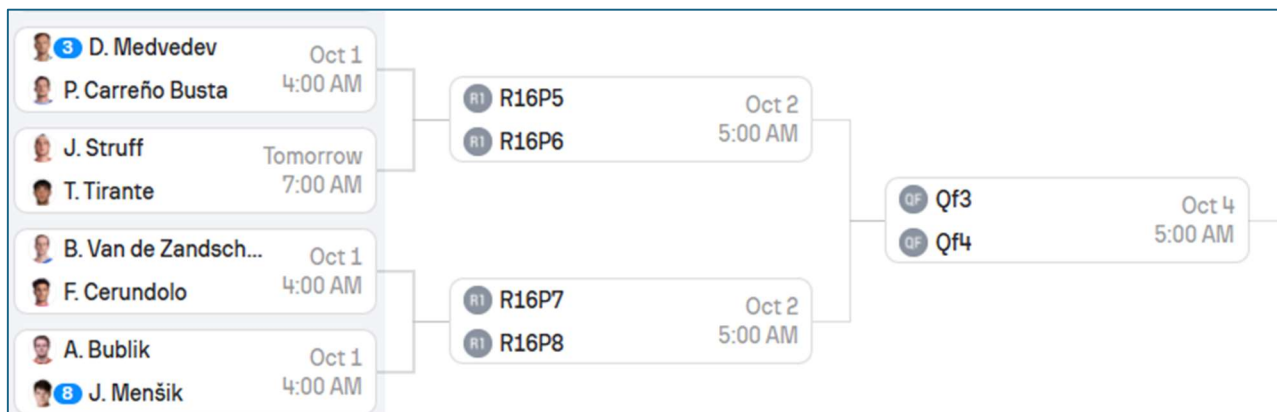

We need Sinner back. Jokes aside, Zverev looking very good and also a easy first matchup for him. Followed by a coming back from injury Shang followed by Bu or Borges.. well not really a tough draw for him, again.

I would just not touch this draw, Djokovic is extremely volatile and he will likely exit R1, depending on his body. Other than that, really just a quarter to let pass.

Projected Plays

NO VALUE – NO plays here

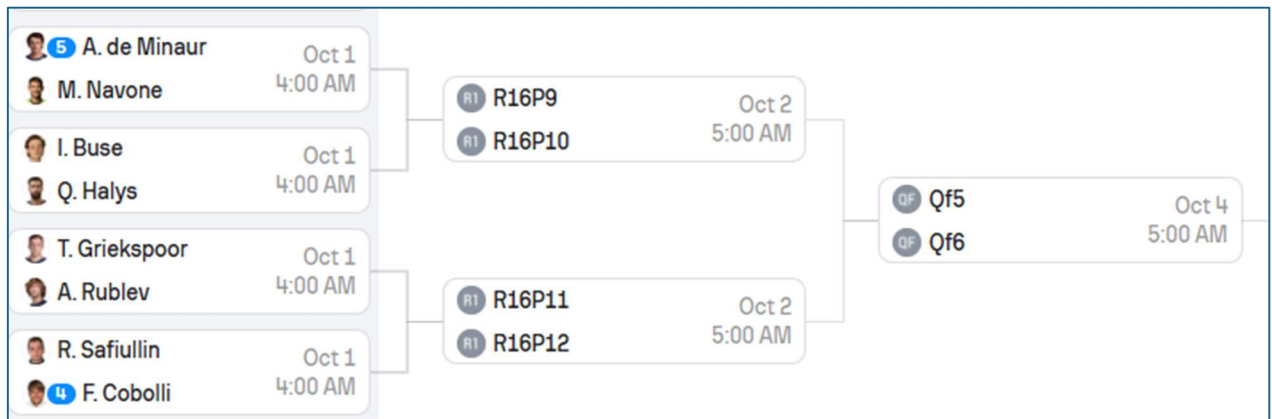

More interesting Quarter with the Hangzhou champion Meddy. Tirante could really step up his game here – he made a really good US Swing with an unlucky opening against his worst type of player (Mannarino, slice-defender).

Bublik is not really interesting, that's why the Odd already dropped to 1.5 to Mensik, even the bookies know already how demotivated he is to the end of the season. Mensik should step up his game here, but he did not look promising at Laver cup or in general at this part of the season, so It honestly leaves me with Cerundolo if he performs well. He has the experience and a good US open performance, I found him extremely solid, but we would have to gauge the level.

Meddy has to play back to back, and he is not bad at all at those types tournemants, in 2023 he won 3 tournemants back to back (Rotterdam, Qatar, Dubai). So I am definitely high on him, he looks like he found his rhythm.

Other than that, I will be just watching the half with these bets:

WIN Medvedev vs Mensik ~1,8 opening

ADM vs Navone is close match in my opinion. ADM is slowly decreasing and Navone is certainly increasing his hardcourt weapons, although it is very unlikely that we will see a upset here. In the next round he could face a dangerous Buse here, and just from watching his levels in the hardcourt swing, I really liked his playstyle. Very aggressive and lights out tennis. I believe a good Buse could push ADM to a 3rd set or win here, but more to come after 1 round.

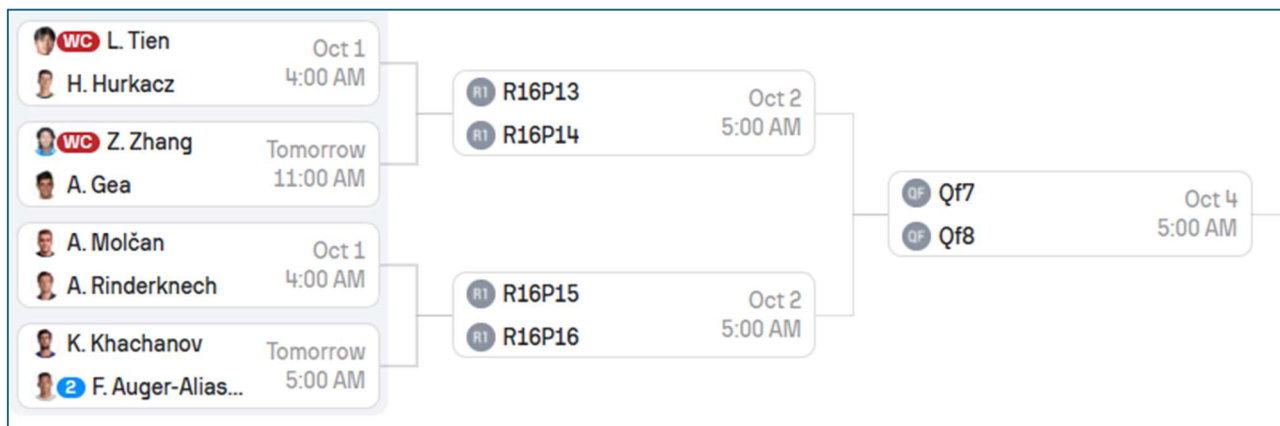

On the bottom we have Cobolli here again starting extremely high on the odds with 1.8 against Safiullin. Cobolli is always in those weird spots where he is basically a top 10 player but priced even with a barely top 100 player. Either way, he will likely get very good odds in R2 and even better one against ADM if he makes it to the QF, so really a lot depends on what intentions he has here, but promising quarter.

Other than that, I will be just watching the quarter with these bets:

OVER Lines Buse vs ADM ~1.8 opening

WIN Cobolli vs Rublev ~1.9 opening

WIN Cobolli vs Alex De Minaur ~2.2 opening

What a quarter again. Hurkacz looked quite like a error machine in the final. Tien should win this typically. Besides that I really like Gea, but it will be a tough long match against Tien, but generally you can say that Gea has a very complete game. I will be watching him but the over lines are definitely interesting, as Tien is really overhyped since the US open. I would categorize him in the same level as a peak Gea.

For the bottom one we have a rematch for FAA, and I think it will be more likely know for him to succeed here in this Quarter. Khachanov would need a really good serve here, like in the US open, to overcome FAA. But for me more a game to watch than prebet round 1.

WIN/ SET WIN Gea vs Tien ~2.5 opening

OVER Lines Gea vs Tien ~ 1.8

Of course during the tournament, we will adjust our choices and bets, but for know this is what we see in ATP Tokyo.